

Your Servants

The wicked servant was the one who went and hid the Master's talent. The wicked servant wasn't killed or told that he was no longer a servant because of his failure, but he was punished. His punishment included surrender of what he had been given and to watch as another put it to use for the Master.

His talents, jobs and gifts are given to us for use to bring more back. Simple use of what he gives is honored too. You don't have to be the greatest user of that talent that ever lived, just simply use it and not hide it away. His talents when used bring return by their very nature.

The man who earned five talents didn't get scolded for not earning ten. He put the talent in the hands of the servants and they make the investment choices. Some avenues are open only to a few investors, but there is always at least one option for use for what He gives. Never does God give a worthless or phony talent.

The servants didn't create the talents so he can take no credit for its creation or worth. He can, however, find ways to employ what he has been given to bring a return to its Rightful Owner. Because of searching for investment opportunities and a willingness to take a risk, much was gained by the Master and servant.
